The house located in a Madrid residential area, Conde de Orgáz's Park, was built 40 years ago and has gone through a lot of transformation. The most impactful of all of them all, as they have changed all the spatial function, is trying to give it maximum spaciousness and brightness at the most important part of the house, the living room.

A domotic system controls both lightning and central heating. The result was very satisfactory, because of the sensation of spaciousness, improving natural light spaces and increasing the view of the garden. All of these improvements were successfully made without sacrificing privacy and covering all necessities.
